SECRETS OF THE DEAD: VIKING WARRIOR QUEEN
TUE 7TH, 8 P.M.
INTRODUCING THE WNET GROUP

When the COVID-19 crisis first hit, upending our lives in frightening, unprecedented ways, I knew people would turn to WNET for answers and inspiration. But how should WNET respond in a world where schools were closing, businesses were shutting down, and the facts about what was really happening were getting lost in the noise and the spin?

I jumped into action with the virtuous team at WNET—even though we had to work virtually.

We lost use of our studios and control rooms, so our news teams turned their living rooms into newsrooms, staying on the air by devising a new way of using computers, phones, and laptops to produce in-depth coverage of the virus and its impact.

Generations of schoolchildren have grown up watching us, so we responded quickly to a new world where school was out. We changed the schedules to include special projects for pre-schoolers, class-room instruction by teachers from their homes, and an archive of our programs that are synched to our family—again!

In fact, you’ll be seeing a change to the name of our family of stations. We have always served our communities as individual stations—THIRTEEN, WLIW21, NJTV, ALL ARTS, CREATE, and WORLD— but this crisis reminds us that we also have always served our communities as our family of stations. We are here for you. Thank you for being there for us.

THE WOMAN WARRIOR
SECRETS OF THE DEAD: VIKING WARRIOR QUEEN • TUE 7TH, 8 P.M.

IN 1878, THE BODY of a great Viking warrior was found in Birka, Sweden, along with a huge cache of weapons. For a century, people assumed the body was that of a man until the 1970s when a young researcher observed the bones that had female characteristics. In 2017, a team of Swedish archaeologists led by Charlotte Hedenstierna-Jonson, a specialist in Viking society in Sweden, astonished the archaeology world with a DNA study proving that the great warrior was a woman. Until then, no one had ever been able to prove the existence of a female Viking military leader.

Join Hedenstierna-Jonson and a team of intrepid archaeologists on a scientific and historical adventure as they examine the history-changing DNA of this warrior and attempt to discover her identity in Viking Warrior Queen, premiering on Secrets of the Dead.

The investigation begins in the late 19th century when archaeologist Hjalmar Stolpe discovered the magnificent burial chamber of a warrior in Birka during a largescale excavation. The grave, numbered Bj 581, immediately caused a sensation due to its abundance of weapons: a shield, knife, bow and arrow, spear, axe, and sword.

“We would think that during the Viking Age, there would be weapons in lots of graves, but there are not, actually. There are several graves that have a weapon or two, but the complete set, that’s very, very unusual,” Hedenstierna-Jonson says in the film.

The two horses buried in the grave provided further proof of the warrior’s esteemed military status. But what led researchers to believe that this mighty warrior was, in fact, a woman?

Osteo-archaeologist Anna Kjellström revisits the Swedish History Museum’s groundbreaking 1975 analysis of the warrior’s arm and pelvic bones. Geneticists Anders Götherström and Maja Krzewinska share insights on their 2017 DNA study that provided definitive evidence of the warrior’s gender.

How does the discovery of the first known female Viking warrior rewrite our understanding of this mysterious and fearsome group? What can we learn about the role of women in Viking society? “The Viking lifestyle, especially if you were a warrior, was all about being remembered,” says Hedenstierna-Jonson. “I think the warrior buried in Bj 581 would love that we’re standing here today, talking about her and her achievements more than a thousand years later.”

Secrets of the Dead fans can also enjoy encores of Hannibal in the Alps (Tue 14th, 8 p.m.) and Egypt’s Darkest Hour (Wed 15th, 10 p.m.).
